As one of the first nationally prominent safety and emergency preparedness speakers, E.G. (Eddy) Weiss' career took him on national speaking tours for over 14 years. His career began in the fire service, which led to two decades of service in both fire and medical response. As he added severe weather research and tornado safety to his resume, he was asked to take on the role of a professional Storm Chaser for several television networks.

With his expanded reach, Eddy began to create emergency management programming for schools, churches, and communities - which led to larger speaking tours - eventually causing him to choose to narrow his focus to emergency management and disaster response. As an acknowledged practical expert in those fields, he has leveraged his extensive background to create dozens of trainings, programs, and presentations for response agencies, government entities, corporations, and educational institutions.

In 2003, he created a disaster response team which later evolved (after Hurricane Katrina) into a tactical response unit designed to support law enforcement and other response teams. This specialty led to his ongoing involvement in research and development for over two dozen rescue and response tool companies around the globe.
